Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

James T. Wollon, Jr., AIA, wrote the following during the 1980 Valleys Planning Council study of the Green Spring Valley:

The NACIREMA BARN is two storeys in height; its stone first storey is expressed as five bays in length while its frame, shingled second storey is expressed as eight bays in length. A square cupola with a bellcast roof is astride the gabled roof of the barn. The principal facade is to the south and the central three bays of the first storey are deeply recessed beneath the second storey, supported by two massive stone piers. The outer bays of the first storey each contain a triple six-light sash. The south wall within the recessed area contains numerous doorways to the stalls within. Several doors and windows are in the end walls of the first storey. The south wall of the tall upper loft storey contains tall doorways with arched louvered transoms in the third and sixth bays; the other six bays each contain a single rectangular louvered opening. Four such openings are in the end walls, two are above low in the gables and a single one is high in each gable. A round louvered opening is in each face of the cupola and a highly ornamental wind-vane tops the cupola. The interior of the structure was not examined.

In late 1997 and early 1998, the barn was being converted to residential use with new window frames and lights as the only noticeable external features.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Nacirema Barn was a feature of an estate called New Stoneton where there was a great Italianate house with a square tower designed by Jackson C. Gott for Alexander Hamilton Stump, president of the Merchants National Bank. The house was built after 1860 when Stump inherited Old Stoneton from his uncle Samuel Stone. 2

Dawn F. Thomas reported in 1978 that the Stump estate also contained a carriage house, slave house, and "other outbuildings." 3

Stump died on February 18, 1886, and was buried on the grounds, but later reinterred at Saint Thomas' P.E. Church cemetery at Garrison Forest Road. The property was then divided into several lots to sell. We have not found an auction advertisement in the county papers in the months following a court order to dispose of the property and the date of its actual sale in early 1888.

The main house and 171 acres were purchased in March 1888 by Mrs. Annie E. Agnus, wife of Felix Agnus, for $25,000. 4

Felix Agnus, sometimes called "General", was a former French soldier who had served in the 1859 war against the Austrians in Northern Italy. Following that he came to the United States in 1860, worked for Tiffany & Company in New York as a silversmith, then joined the Union Army as a member of the Fifth New York Zouaves. Agnus was commissioned a lieutenant for bravery at the Battle of Big Bethel in Virginia in June 1862. Wounded a few days later at the Battle of Gaines Mill, Agnus was shipped back to Baltimore to recover. There he was befriended by a city family and wound up marrying their daughter in 1864. By the end of the war Agnus held the brevet rank of general.

After the war, the young general was taken into the newspaper business by his father-in-law Charles Carroll Fulton. Agnus eventually became publisher and owner of the Baltimore American. 5

On buying New Stoneton, Agnus renamed it "Nacirema," which is "American" spelled backwards. Here Agnus lived on a grand scale, raised horses, and gave elegant parties, once entertaining 1,500 persons. 6

The important question is whether the barn was built by Agnus or did it come with the New Stoneton mansion. The structure was estimated as an early 20th century building on the National Register form prepared in 1980 by James T. Wollon, Jr., AIA, and Darlene O. Schultz, who wrote the architectural and historical pages, respectively. The barn seems to be one of the small squares at the bend of the estate road shown in the 1898 and 1915 issues of Bromley's atlases. 7 The 1877 atlas is not helpful because only a large square representing the mansion appeared.

Agnus wrote extensively, including an article about cattle raising at Nacirema which appeared in the Towson weekly in the early 1890s. In 1894 he wrote a testimonial letter for New Jersey Enamel Paint, saying he used it "on my residence and outbuildings at Nacirema." 8

On the death of Agnus in 1925, the mansion passed to James Walter Carter and Margaret Wolfolk Carter, who had the spacious Victorian villa demolished to build something more modern. The successor house never came into being and the property was subdivided in 1940, the mansion lot and the barn passing to Carle A. Jackson, son of the mayor of Baltimore, and his wife opera diva Rosa Ponselle Jackson. The Jacksons had an authentic masonry Italian country house built on the hilltop in 1940 to a design of Palmer and Lambden. That house was called Villa Pace from the aria "Pace, Pace, O Mio Dio" from Verdi's La Forza del Destino, the opera in which Rosa had made her debut in 1918 opposite Enrico Caruso. This third great house on the premises cost $500,000.

Even today, opera critics call Ms. Ponselle the greatest female vocalist of the century; her records are now available in compact disc. Ms. Ponselle sold parts of the Villa Pace grounds over the years, disposing of the barn tract in 1950 to Dr. Nicholas L. Ballich. 9 After her divorce, she used Ponselle as her official name, although she was born Rosa Ponzillo and adopted Ponselle as a stage name in vaudeville. She died at the villa on May 25, 1981. For a time Baltimore County considered buying the property for educational purposes but eventually the house was acquired by Thomas Obrecht and wife. 10 In 1997, the U.S. Post Office issued a stamp bearing Rosa Ponselle's portrait, adding her to the other
